

Mark Bashkansky received PhD in physics in 1988 from Columbia University Graduate School of Arts and Sciences. Since 1988 he is employed as a Research Physicist at Naval Research Laboratory. He specializes in basic and applied research in theory and experiment in nonlinear optics; quantum optics and atomic physics. He has extensive publishing record in archival journals, eight patents, two NRL review articles, three book chapters in OSA handbook of Optics vol. IV, Encyclopedia of Modern Optics, Academic Press and "Slow Light: Science and Applications" Taylor and Francis Group LLC. He is a member of the Optical Society of America and the American Physical Society.